You are reading a free preview page 2 is not shown in this preview. We already discussed Trip Circuits Supervision relay earlier. Two other important basic operating relays are used in the wiring diagram of the switch. One is anti-pumping relay and another is relay contact multiplier. Both relays are only value-added relays or typically is called as auxiliary circuit break relay which means they do not contribute to the power system protection system (current consent). We can also manage the power system without these relays. Relay Anti-Pumping: Basic function: It is used to protect the switch from multiple closing commands. Once the switch is closed, if we give the closing command again it means that the switch or closing coil associated with the mechanical parts can damage. In order to avoid these frequent commands, in the circuit of closing the switch itself, the panel manufacturer is wiring these circuits correctly. The anti-Pumping relay is nothing but a NO contact, which means that when the switch under closed conditions the relay will be as NO point and if the switch under open conditions the relay will be as NC Condition. More information: Above Tension Protection Working Principle 59Refer Anti-pumping Relay Scheme: Anti-Pumping Relay Diagram [wp ad camp_1] Anti-pumping relays are connected in series with the switch locking circuit. Here during Normal Condition (Circuit breaker in Open condition) the relay that allows the closing command of the breaker and if the puzzle once closed then the connected series NC becomes NO, then after closing the switch the relay does not allow to flow the current in the closing coils (Due to NO operation R=infinity, Correct =0) evaihc evaihc itnup .erotturretni'led arusuihc id otuicr id ipit i ittut rep iratadnam onos gnipmup-itna "Åler I :atoN cce ,enoisnet atla da erailsua enoisnet atla da erotturretnI ,erotturretnI / erotturretnI ni itazzilitu onnaras iggalbac itseug Pumping Relay: anti=> con, pumping = injection. Relay protects current/voltage injection on the circuit. It should connect in series with protection. It does not require any other installation of auxiliary relays. Breaker's contact itself can be wired. If you have fewer contacts for the switch, you can connect the contact multiplier relays.
